CABLE COWBOY

JOHN MALONE

AND THE RISE OF THE
MODERN CABLE BUSINESS

'Darth Vader'

The aggressive tactics Malone used to build TCI prompted former US vice president Al Gore to label him the cable industry's "Darth Vader". A reference to Malone using his power at TCI to demand stakes in cable networks, particularly start-ups, in return for distribution.

Malone also fought vigorously against US 'must-carry' laws that require cable operators to carry free-to-air networks like NBC and ABC and, as a matter of course, structures deals to help him pay very low taxes and has a rather well documented loathing of big government.

Malone, the largest private landowner in the United States with about 2.2 million acres to his name, is no stranger to battles with media titans either.

The reclusive billionaire has faced off with Murdoch numerous times on US soil, at one point acquiring a big slice of Murdoch's voting position in News Corp that came onto the market unbeknownst to the newspaper baron. Malone eventually leveraged that stake to pry satellite TV company DirecTV from Murdoch.

If we look at the venn diagram like image on Woody's holster, I also see it as a reference to using RGB for digital images vs. CMYK for printing.

We also see the first dog posted by @TheRoaringKitty has green eyes vs. red eyes in the second one that was posted today.

Black eyes gives us none other than Stella which represent $SIRI! 🐶

If we look at the full clip of this scene, Woody falls into a pile of cards that show the Ace of Spades which is also black.

It's very coincidental that he posted this meme at the exact same time of Trump's press conference in NYC today.

What does circle on woodys holster signify in toy story

Answer

In "Toy Story," Woody's holster features a circle with a star inside it, which is part of his design as a toy based on a stereotypical cowboy from the American Old West. Here's what the circle on Woody's holster might signify:

The first happens very early, before the 4-minute mark, when the light labeled “Sirius” falls from the dome ceiling. By itself, this event doesn’t perturb Truman too much, and later on the radio explains the light as having fallen from an airplane. The

A game where every boss fight feels like the “Final Boss”

The Star

"What will you gain by fighting us? Do you think they will welcome you?"

-The Star

The Star is the tenth and final boss of Furi. Despite being the final boss, it is in fact, optional. Depending on the ending chosen, you can avoid fighting this boss entirely. The fight, in a change of pace, is entirely ranged, focusing entirely on the bullet hell aspect of combat with no dueling/CQC segments.

The boss takes the form of a giant holographic floating head surrounded by 4 metal arms and 4 drones that it uses to fight with until the last phase. Due to dialogue during the fight, it's heavily implied that this boss was The Stranger's superior. It refers to him as Rider and asks for his judgement of the planet, as he was sent to determine if the planet was to be invaded/assimilate to prolong the survival of their own planet. The army on the mother ship seeming to be many men that look a lot like The Stranger. As to whether they are clones or simply other inhabitants from the same planet is unknown.

NutSo-Crazy
@CrazyLadyTrader

Roaring Kitty, a key figure in the $GME saga, has made several intriguing tweets referencing Game of Thrones. One notable post showed the dragon waking up with red eyes instead of blue, a scene from Season 7, Episode 7, "The Dragon and the Wolf," which originally aired on August 27. The significance of the number seven is hard to ignore.

If we consider each remaining episode of Game of Thrones as a day, it suggests something significant might happen around September 2. If instead, we look at weeks, it points to October 8—a date that has the intriguing number 1008, a figure heavily discussed in the past.

In the series finale, "The Iron Throne," Bran the Broken, the Three-Eyed Raven, becomes king. Who else has looked a bit broken during a livestream? Bran, like Bruno from Encanto, can see the past, present, and future, though he's a bit more reserved and somber in his role.

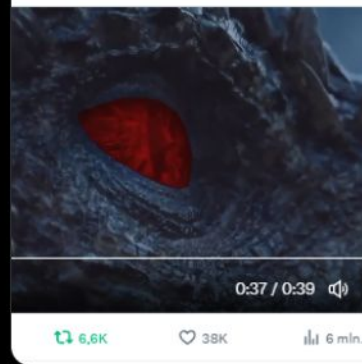

Roaring Kitty also shared clips from pivotal Game of Thrones episodes like "Dance of the Dragons" (Season 5, Episode 9), which aired on June 7, 2015. Coincidentally, Roaring Kitty did a livestream on June 7, 2024, with a thumbnail referencing Game of Thrones. Another notable reference is "The Winds of Winter" (Season 6, Episode 10), featuring the haunting piano piece "Light of the Seven" during the Sept of Baelor's destruction. The number seven continues to weave its way through these connections.

The number seven holds deep symbolism in Game of Thrones, representing the Faith of the Seven, the Seven Kingdoms, and the Seven Hells. Roaring Kitty also referenced the movie Seven in a tweet, and intriguingly, "Seven" shares the same gematria value as "Horse," adding another layer of mystery.

Given the recurring theme of seven, I can't help but wonder if we shouldn't end at episode 69 with "A Knight of the Seven Kingdoms." Counting in weeks, this lands on September 10, coinciding with GME's earnings report and bringing back the number 69—a nod to the fan-favorite episode centered on Brienne of Tarth.

The number seven is driving me crazy, just like the edited tweet about "Split." For now... September feels like the month to watch. Sept...could it be the month when the Sept is destroyed with Green Wildfire? After all, in Game of Thrones, the past often foreshadows the future.

Tweet #3 V for Vendetta / Ready Player One / GoT

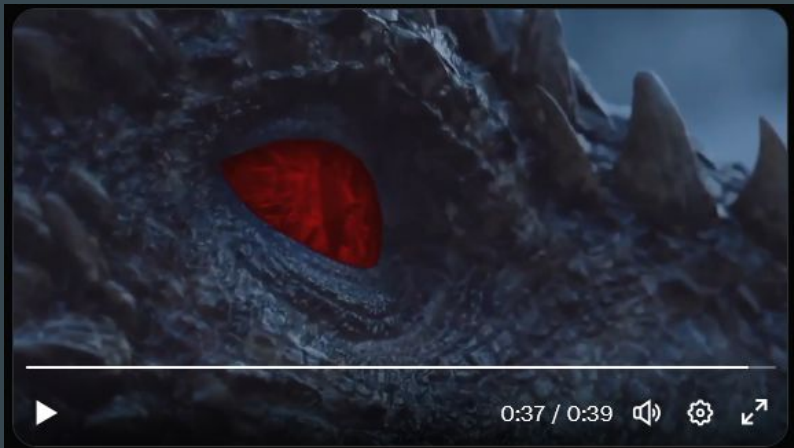

An overture, derived from the French word "ouverture," meaning opening, is a piece of music played by an orchestra at the beginning of an opera, ballet, or musical play. Therefore, overtures are not just like any other opening to a musical piece or a composition.

Overtures serve as precursors to the main performance, setting the tone and mood for what's to come. They often incorporate melodies from the forthcoming songs or themes. Traditionally, the overture was used to signal the audience to take their seats and prepare for the show, much like a musical curtain-raiser.

As the purpose of an overture is to hint at some musical ideas to come, it's used by composers to introduce motifs that recur throughout the piece. For example, in an opera, the motifs introduced during the overture reappear and are developed in various forms later on. Therefore, the motifs incorporated into an overture can offer a glimpse of what will come in the subsequent parts of the musical work. This creates a sense of continuity and cohesion throughout the entire composition.

FEMA Approves SiriusXM Channels As EAS Source.

Nov 13, 2018

The list of Emergency Alert System monitoring sources has grown by two after the Federal Emergency Management Agency approved the use of two free preview channels on the SiriusXM network as alternate monitoring assignments for national alerts. The move means that local radio stations or emergency management agencies can monitor Sirius channel No. 184 or XM channel No. 1 in order to trigger local EAS equipment. The decision is based on what IPAWS division director Antwane Johnson said has been the "on-going relationship" between the satellite radio company and FEMA.

SiriusXM became part of the Emergency Alert System in 2005 when FEMA installed equipment at XM Radio's Washington, DC studios, creating a Primary Entry Point or "PEP" station. That's the network of 77 mostly AM stations that have a direct connection to FEMA and act as a primary broadcast source for national EAS messages. "That equipment remains in place to this day," Johnson pointed out in a letter to the company. In addition to SiriusXM, the government also works with iHeartMedia's Premiere Networks to relay EAS messages from its satellites.

For FEMA the approval of SiriusXM ensures there's one more satellite-delivered distribution point for critical disaster or emergency information to broadcasters and directly to listeners. "While all SiriusXM subscribers will receive national EAS messages regardless of what channel they may be listening to at the time an alert is issued, use of the two above described channels will ensure that any national-level EAS message is received and further distributed without regard to whether the radio receiver is currently, or ever was, subscribed to a SiriusXM satellite radio service," Johnson said.

God. It's a publicly traded company. Just look at their earnings reports. Quarter 3 revenue was $2.27 billion with $747 million ebitda. Net income is higher than Disney. No they are not going out of business. They are a cash making machine.

They make 2 BILLION a year in profits. This lawsuit, if successful, will be a rounding error on the balance sheet, and any costs they incur will just be passed on to the consumer in higher subscription fees.

Remember, they aren't just a satellite radio company anymore. They also run Pandora, one of the largest streaming audio companies in the world and have many podcasts and other investments in addition to the 35 million subscribers they have.

They've not been "just a satellite radio company" for a long time. They've got aviation and maritime weather systems that have been around for a while now too. They're not going anywhere.

Oh, I'm aware. Was just talking about their bigger endeavors. There's also the data service (Traffic) that is in many cars, and they even dabbled in backseat video for a bit.

Reverse mergers and reverse splits typically result in a change in the CUSIP, the nine-digit identification symbol assigned to a public stock.

Once that CUSIP changes, the naked shorter has no apparent way to close out the naked short position. No stock under the old CUSIP number exists anymore; it all automatically converts to the new CUSIP.

Those trades can sit in the Obligation Warehouse forever, in theory. But the "aged fails" – essentially orphaned naked short transactions – remain on the naked shorter's balance sheet as a liability to be paid later.

By DiIorio's reckoning, then, the cycle of naked shorting and reverse splits would inevitably result in an ever-increasing number of aged fails. And if that was happening, and those liabilities grew bigger and bigger, then federal regulators could see the outlines of the scheme on any financial statement.

Tweet #2 Thanos - Wolverine

No SiriusXM connection

Thanos comes out and says “Fine I’ll do it myself”

No Stones in Gauntlet.

Audio Playing is from Inglorious Bastards, a scene where a “Jew Bear” comes to knock off the head of an uncooperative Nazi

Wolverine is naked

Crowd Cheering, has anyone sourced this audio? Heard a few different possible sources (Endgame?)
